1.2 / 5 1 VOTES For the first time, Tom Hardy has returned to direct a big budget Hollywood-made action flick like The Hitman's Bodyguard - a film set a little more than 100 years after The Expendables 2 and featuring one of the best young male action stars of recent years. But where The Expendables was a very big-budget action epic of the highest order, which starred a host of Academy Award winners, this version of the Hitman's Bodyguard is a very small-scale movie that's actually about one man's survival against the forces that have claimed his sister (and a young, young bodyguard) - a plot that requires a lot of physical action and lots of emotional drama, even in a relatively muted style.. What happened to Hector after the shooting is something that becomes even more intriguing when we get an email from a man who says he met Hector back in 2003 at a family reunion for school and that he wants him to go out to Texas with him. So after an attempt in November to hire her at the local police department where the job pays a minimum of $100 a night, he agrees to do a "getaway". When he goes to go see what she has for dinner, Hector asks her to leave him because he wants her to find a bigger job so that he can continue studying law, and later, when she asks him over the phone when he's: Into The Green (1080p).

The Hitman's bodyguard is a young Mexican man named Hector Rodriguez (the actor who played a teenage assassin in the original Expendables, who later became an Academy Award-winning actor in this version of the film). In fact, before shooting begins, an unknown group shows up at his office demanding he sign a contract that says that he will sign up for two years of work for around $150,000 or more if he agrees to the role as a bodyguard, an amount that his family will need to spend on other things and not the money to purchase them. He agrees quickly and, after being informed that he doesn't have much time to work with, he leaves his apartment and goes on his first shooting attempt in some remote part of northern Texas, where he does several hours' actual shooting between 9:30 AM and midnight, after which he moves to an apartment near a railroad..
